Hoover: A Famous Seal

One day many years ago, a couple in Maine, a northeastern state on the U.S. east coast, found a small baby seal. They decided to take care of him.

They brought him home, put him in a bathtub, and fed him small fish. He ate many fish. He ate the fish quickly, and he ate like a vacuum cleaner -- that is why his name is Hoover, like the original vacuum cleaner.

When Hoover was four months old, he became too big for the bath tub, so his owners put him in a big pond behind their house. Here, Hoover began to talk. But, after a while his owners could not afford to keep him any longer because he was eating so many fish! They gave him to the Boston Aquarium.

Hoover spent the rest of his lifetime in the Boston Aquarium. He attracted many visitors because he talked, and he also was very friendly. Some of his phrases were “Hello there,” “How are you?” “Get out of here,” and “Get down.” After he said these things, he laughed. His audience laughed, too, and clapped for him.

At the aquarium, scientists studied Hoover because he was a very unusual seal. The scientists wanted to know why Hoover talked. And why the other seals didn’t talk.

Hoover was the subject of several magazine articles and television shows. He became famous and made many friends. He was the father of several baby seals. Some of his descendants are still living in the Boston Aquarium.
