Directions: Circle all of the verb errors. Write the correct verb form above each mistake.

In 1928 Theodore Roosevelt was elected governor of New York. After he became ill, she helped him and became his "legs." She inspected state hospitals, prisons, and homes for the elderly. In 1932 he was elected again, and this gave her a national platform from which to address her concerns. Roosevelt became a new kind of First Lady. She began to hold weekly press conferences, speaking only to women reporters mainly on women's issues. In 1935 she started writing a column, "My Day," which appeared in national newspapers. For its first three years, "My Day" focuses on the concerns of women. By 1939, however, Roosevelt started to address general political topics in her column.
