Worksheet 5. Reading: The Trans-Siberian Railway

Read this passage from a travel website. Answer the questions on the next page.

Q: What is the best way to go from Moscow to Beijing?

A: The best way to go from Moscow to Beijing is on the Trans-Siberian Railway, which is the longest railway in the world. On this train, you will travel across half of the globe, and pass through eight time zones to reach the furthest edge of one immense country.

Your journey will leave you with unique memories and the feeling of experiencing something extraordinary. It will change the way you see time and distance. Days slide by as different passengers meet, have drinks and meals together, and form friendships as the train rolls on, stops for provisions, and takes on new passengers. Outside, you will view the scenic Ural Mountains, the great Siberian plains, the bottomless Lake Baikal, the steppes of the Mongolian nomads, and the easternmost Russian city, Vladivostok, before crossing the border into China.

You can stop off at one of the stations, take a tour or stay awhile, and board the train again on another day. Your travel plans can be flexible, providing you with maximum opportunities for independent discovery.

Q: What about money? How should we carry money?

A: Take some cash for use on your arrival in Russia (for immediate food, taxis, and hotels), and for the rest, take credit cards and traveler’s checks. Take cash if you visit small towns or the countryside, or if you take a cruise. Cash is used more often than credit cards in Russia. U.S. dollars and euros are often easier to change than other currencies. Sometimes you will get a better exchange rate with euros, and sometimes with dollars when you change to the Russian ruble, the Mongolian Togrog, or the Chinese Yuan. Of course, the safest way to carry your money is in traveler’s checks.

steppes = a large land area without trees, especially in Russia, Asia, and eastern Europe nomad = a member of a tribe that travels from place to place instead of living in one place all the time, usually in order to find grass for their animals
